Abstract

A great achievement of the age of technology is cyberspace, which covers many areas of human life today. Cyberspace has been so intertwined with man's life that it is difficult to imagine life without it. Moral values present in real space are present in this new world too. One important valuable moral principle that plays a substantial role in moralizing cyberspace is justice. Justice in cyberspace has a wide concept that involves many aspects of the individual and social lives of citizens. This study aims to answer questions regarding the moral responsibilities of people connected to virtual space with respect to the moral principle of justice. According to the research findings, certain norms, dos and don'ts, and moral codes can be determined for virtual space users based on the principle of justice. For information collection, this paper conducted library and field research about virtual space. It is analytical with respect to information provision and applied with respect to the aim of research.
